Metadata – as the name suggests – is data about data. While most of it may seem innocuous, it can be highly valuable to police, investigators and others.

With the proliferation of smartphones, the amount and type of metadata that is available has increased dramatically. In this episode of TCTV, Philip Branch explains the privacy consequences of having all this metadata available.

This video is a co-production between SBS World News and The Conversation.

See also:
Metadata and the law: what your smartphone really says about you
VIDEO: Why some people just don’t like music
VIDEO: Why older adults love online dating
VIDEO: Are raw foods good for you?
VIDEO: Coworking – the benefits of collaborative workspaces
VIDEO: How the weather affects our mood
VIDEO: What are stars?
VIDEO: How laser tattoo removal works
VIDEO: Solving the world’s toilet shortage
VIDEO: Were the first artists women?
VIDEO: The benefits of high-intensity workouts